

Blackberry Looking Good After Saudi Trouble

The recent press related to the problems Blackberry users have been experiencing in Saudi Arabia and the potential of this problem escalating to China has yet to result in any negative results on sales or prices of the Blackberry Models. According to phoneLot.com the fastest growing online trading platform, Blackberry prices have remained consistent with trends across the mobile industry and the quantities being traded have remained stable.

The issue arose last week after a number of governments demanded to gain access to encrypted email and text messages sent and received by Blackberry users only to be told that RIM have no access to the desired information. As a result of this action Saudi Arabia banned Blackberry's instant messaging service disrupting up to 700,000 accounts. Since then the dispute has moved on and on the surface appears to have been resolved, with RIM apparently agreeing to have their server co-located in Saudi Arabia and a creating a situation where the Saudi government could potentially gain admittance to the encrypted traffic.

On a plus side for Blackberry, this situation has encouraged an almost constant Blackberry presence in the global media which should help sales of their latest Smartphone, the Torch 9800. The Torch is already being sought after on the grey market with the leading online mobile phone trading platforms www.phonelot.com and www.gsmexchange.com reporting the Torch as available and in high demand.
